We've Got A Great Group!

Whiz Bang Science Show

By: Quinten Molyneaux
The Whiz Bang Science Show is about one-and-a-half-hours performed by Dr. Dave. The show is full of fun science experiments—did you know you could rip a phonebook? I didn't know this was possible until I attended the show. He demonstrated for us how he could rip a phonebook and then he explained. “You must first curl the book,” he said, “then begin to tear the book” he told us. By doing this, it allows you to tear the book page by page, and everyone knows that things are stronger together. He also showed us he could break a board of wood with his hand without taking martial-arts. He showed us once again then told us how he did it. He said to make sure the lines were vertical and that the board was held properly (hands on or near the middle of the board on the right and left side); then he said to push with all of your force and imagine that you were going to make your hand go straight through the board and if you scream that you can handle more pain. If you enjoy learning new and interesting things that you can demonstrate to your friends and family, then I recommend that you attend a Whiz Bang Science Show.

Mythology: The Death of Odin

This summer, mythology is being offered as an elective for the first time. Mr. Williams, the teacher, intends that his class “will take a journey through time to see the stories of myth from Greece, Mesopotamia, and Africa as window to the past and as foundational materials for religion and philosophy.” Tyler Anthony writes about one of the myths.

Odin is a Norse god that died due to wolf-related reasons. Here’s a taste of what this is all about. Odin is a battle-god, and his sword is real shiny—the sun of the battle-gods shines from his sword. He and his friend Beli, a giant, fight this wolf and, you guessed it, Odin dies. “Now she must see Odin killed by the Fenrir wolf”. Then sadly Beli dies. Here is how she dies: the Vanir Freyr, brother of Freya, killed the giant Beli—“Beli bright slayer”—with a deer horn because he had given his sword to a servant.

What are the top three things to pack to survive the dorms?

To survive this program it would be smart to bring at least 2 fans, because the dorms can feel like an oven. Also bring a frivolous amount of snacks, because you may get hungry after dinner. Lastly, it may be smart to get a mini fridge because some people bring drinks and like them cold.

What is your favorite question to ask on college tours and why?

My questions would be; how long are classes? This would provide a sense of how long you would be within the classroom. When is lunch? So I can plan my day and know when I can eat. How many classes do you take? I want to schedule my classes so I have enough study time.

What are some ways to get involved during the UB summer program?

Some of the ways to get involved in the UB summer program would be to run for a position in the student council. I personally would try to run for President. I would be good to go for a run in the morning with Robert (one of the RAs). Be on your best behavior because you don't want LOFT's.

College Visit to KSU

This week we visited Kent State University. In the Admissions presentation we learned that Kent State is the second largest university in Ohio offering many majors and excelling in many areas such as fashion design, flight instruction, translation, nursing, and many other areas. After the presentation, we were divided into three groups based on our career interests for a tour of the campus. We saw many areas of the campus and visited model dormitory rooms. It was a lot of walking! Then we visited the May 4th memorial on the campus and watched a film about the events that day. We were also privileged to receive tours of the historic site from a professor and a student who were very knowledgeable and committed to the May 4th memorial.

After a hearty dinner at the Spaghetti Warehouse, we spent some time at the F.A. Seiberling Nature Realm near Akron. The evening was beautiful and cool. We explored the trails through the woods and beside ponds, meeting a turtle on the way. On one trail, a suspension bridge crossed a deep gorge. It was a great way to end a long day.

I like to write poetry, and sing (but you have to catch me singing). My favorite colors are purple and blue as well. In the future I plan to attend a top tier combined Master/ PhD program and study social work and public administration. One day I'll be Dr. Darrisaw.

I am an alumna of the UB program and am very grateful to give back and get to know all the students!
